Handwritten text in a South Indian script, likely Grantha or Tamil, on a palm leaf manuscript. The text is arranged in approximately 10 horizontal lines. The script is finely inscribed and appears to be a form of classical South Indian literature or religious text. There are two distinct circular holes visible along the length of the leaf, which were traditionally used for threading a cord to bind multiple leaves together into a book format.

Continuation of the handwritten text on a second palm leaf manuscript. This leaf also contains approximately 10 lines of text in the same script as the first leaf. It features two circular holes for binding. The text continues the narrative or discourse from the previous leaf, maintaining the same level of scriptural formality and precision.

A close-up photograph of a piece of aged, yellowed paper with two circular holes punched through it. The paper is covered in faint, illegible handwritten text in a cursive script, likely from a 19th-century document. The paper has a warm, yellowish-brown tone and shows signs of wear, including creases and discoloration. The handwriting is dense and fills most of the page, though the ink is very light and difficult to read. The two circular holes are positioned horizontally, one on the left and one on the right, suggesting the paper was once part of a bound volume or a folder.
